

Feb 14, 2022 – Review w/ Maria & Krista

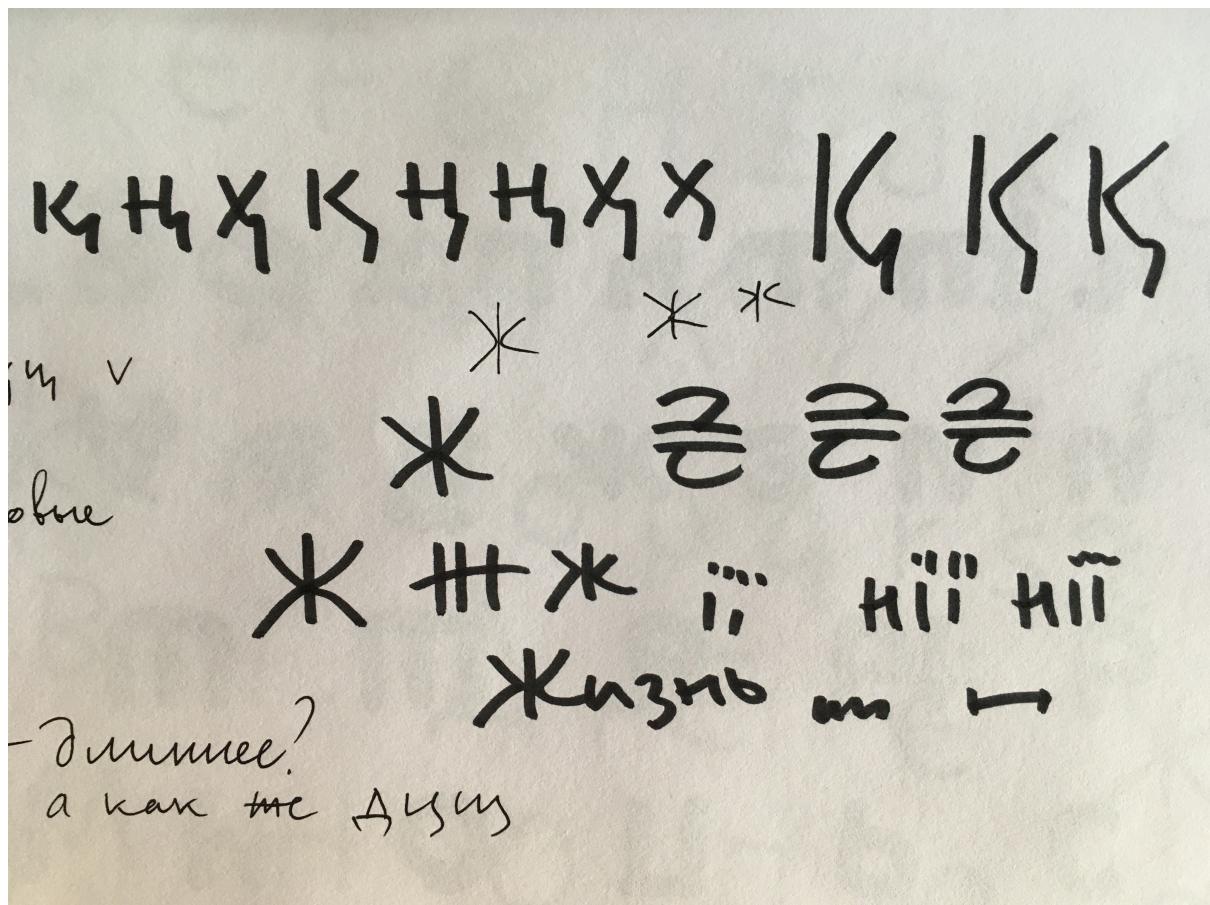

Most of the following comments are from Maria, unless otherwise specified, as Krista had internet connection & audio issues due to travel.

Maria: "this shape is a little weird for handwriting... try alternatives"

- maybe it could be a little less symmetrical
- could borrow from Б or Я

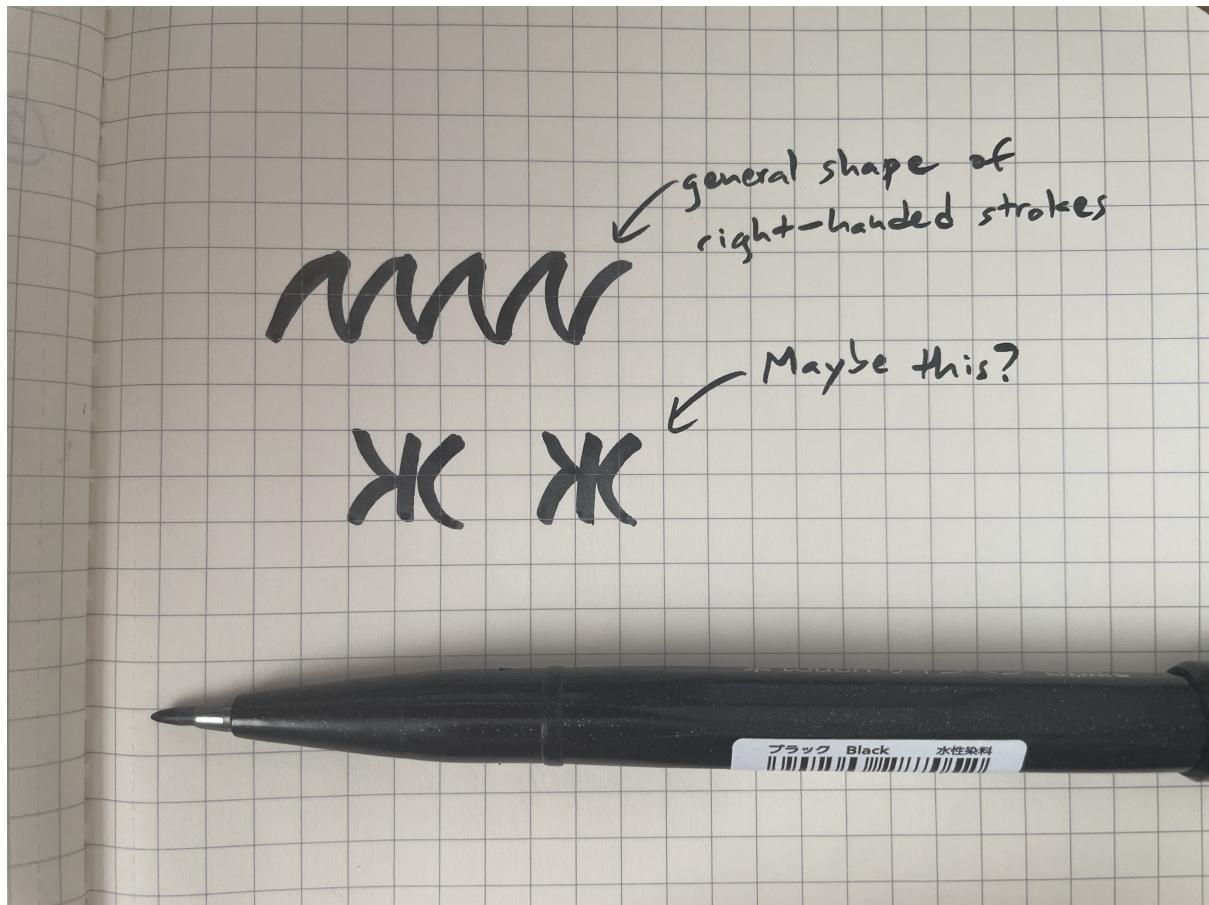

Anya, in the chat:

Stephen:

(Maybe we could keep the right side like the K, but make the top left a little straighter or curved the other way? Just one possibility, though!)

Maria

- spikes are a little bit short in lowercase

Krista

- “You should add the Serbian locl features for Macedonian language too”

New hooks

й ў и

The image shows three handwritten cursive forms. 'й' has a purple arrow pointing down from the top loop to the bottom loop. 'ў' has a red arrow pointing down from the top loop to the bottom loop. 'и' has a red arrow pointing down from the top loop to the bottom loop.

Maria: The double loops on ъ look a little unnatural

Maria: In ЪБ, Turning point is important... could be curved up a little bi ç ò è ù á é s i ï j

Could make center a little lighter to allow more white

ñ

The spike in ñ always looks a little short compared to others, and needs a bit of compensation

þ needs to have its crossbar at the x-height, and the middle bit can be skinny to compensate (like e)

ɸ appears to be “shifted up” a bit

- Krista: I think the default Φ is fine for Bulgarian too ... Maybe you don't need a separate shape

If we think of this as more of a “sans,” avoid these bars ... but if we see it more as “handwriting,” we can keep them. Or, it can be a stylistic set.

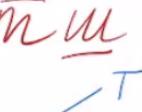

- Maybe check out Manu, by Typotheque. It has a stylistic set for these lines
- Krista: Yes, I think it's going too much in the handwritten direction with the Serbian strokes

Maybe attaching this could perhaps look more natural, and more like a single letter

Actions

- add locl for macedonian characters, just as copies of the Serbian
- ask Joanna about Serbian, and about the њ glyph shape
